WHAT: This one-of-a-kind, half-day summit brings together human resource professionals, business owners, community leaders, and elected officials from eight Central Florida counties (Orange, Seminole, Osceola, Lake, Sumter, Brevard, Flagler, and Volusia). Attendees will gain insights into the region's workforce, discover industry best practices, discover the resources needed to help their businesses succeed, and grow professionally, earning 2 HRCI credit hours for the event.

This year's summit will focus on human resources' legal issues, multi-generational communication in the workplace, and a panel discussion revolving around building regional talent incubators, a key element in ensuring the economic viability of the region's future. Speakers include Ann Beecham, Andy Hament, Robin King, Jayson Meyer, and Robert Newland, who will engage attendees with provocative and insightful topics engineered to have the most meaningful and long-lasting impacts on how they operate their businesses.

Participants will have the opportunity to network with some of the area's foremost business theorists and visionaries; engage with business and workforce experts, executives, and partners; and discover in-demand technologies they need and want to embrace today, for tomorrow.

This is a rare opportunity for local business leaders to change the way they look at conducting business, learn how to better communicate across generations and cultures, and explore options regional leaders are working on to ensure a bright business future for our region.
